South Irvine students to get free lunch, breakfast

By WHITNEY LEGGETT
CV&T News Editor

While lunch prices for most Estill County schools went up from the previous school year, one school has met standards that allow all of its students to get free breakfast and lunch.

South Irvine Preschool and Kindergarten Center met the needs required to qualify for the Community Eligibility Option (CEO) opportunity.

Kentucky is one of seven states that offers CEO for its students through the National School Lunch Program.

According to a press release issued from the Department of Education, "This option provides an alternative to household applications for free and reduced price meals in high poverty schools."

The Estill County Board of Education voted to participate in the program at its June 21 meeting.

Assistant Superintendent Randall Christopher told the board South Irvine qualified based on the number of students whose families qualified for the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP), the program formerly known as food stamps, and the Kentucky Transitional Assistance Program (KTAP).

A calculation is performed to determine eligibility by mulitplying the number of students directly certified through SNAP and KTAP by 1.6. Students who are identified on the homeless, migrant and federally funded head start lists are also used in the calculation.

RANDALL CHRISTOPHER
Asst. Superintendent

If 40 percent or more of students are directly certified, a school is eligible.

203 of the 317 or approximately 64 percent of students enrolled at South Irvine are directly certified.

All of the schools in the district are eligible for CEO but because of reimbursement issues won't be participating in the program.

Christopher said schools need to be in the 90th or 100th percentile in order to be reimbursed enough to use the program.

Only schools that reach 100 percent or higher are fully reimbursed for the free lunches.

Christopher said what isn't reimbursed must be paid out of the general fund. He said if each school in the district participated there would be a $60,000 to $70,000 loss.

"Just because a school is eligible does not mean it is affordable," he said.

Schools that choose to participate in the program agree to serve the free lunches and breakfasts for four successive school years.

ADULT EDUCATION CELEBRATES GED GRADUATION

By KYLE WOOSLEY

"Do what it takes and don't let others discourage you."

This was the advice from District Judge Wallace Taylor during his key-note speech at the Estill County General Education Development (GED) graduation.

Thirty-eight of the 62 graduates walked across the stage at Estill County High School Friday night to receive their diplomas for passing the GED exam.

Mary Skipper, director of Estill County Adult Education, said it was one of the largest graduation ceremonies she has seen during her 10 years with the program.

"In the 10 years that I've been holding GED graduation, it's gotten larger and larger," Skipper said. "We just had a good group of graduates this year."

Skipper said she estimates about 260 family members, friends and community supporters showed up to the ceremony Friday night.

"We really had a good crowd," Skipper said. "Probably the largest crowd we've ever had."

Taylor, whose son is also a graduate of the GED program, said he commends those who power through it.

County fair coming to town June 30

By WHITNEY LEGGETT
CV&T News Editor

The 2012 Estill County Fair begins Saturday, June 30, and runs through Saturday, July 7. There are also several events the next weekend on July 13 and 14.

The Fair Board hopes this fair will be the "best in history."

"We strive every year to make the fair better," Fair Board President Teddy Hunt said.

Hunt said because of the economy he hopes people will make it a point to come out and enjoy their local fair.

"The economy is bad," he said. "So, people want to come out and do local things. For one low price, they can see the events at the grandstand and ride the rides."

The fair kicks off this year with the sheep show bright and early Saturday morning at 10. The meat and goat show begins later that day at 1 p.m.

That night beginning at 8 is the Miss Estill County Pageant followed by the Miss Estill County Teen Pageant at 9 p.m.

Pay lake opens at Wisemantown

By LISA BICKNELL
CV&T Staff Writer

A new pay lake opened just off Wisemantown road this weekend.

Just minutes from town, the lake is located high on a hill overlooking a scenic valley.

Owned and operated by Jesse Willis, there are nine fishing decks built out over the edge over the water.

An air-conditioned bait shop on the premises also sells bait, fishing equipment, snacks and cold drinks.

Restroom facilities are located at convenient locations around the lake also. The area is well-lighted at night and parking is plentiful.

Guests are encouraged to bring their own chairs.

It costs $12 to fish as long as you want or until you catch six fish. The pay lake is open from noon to midnight on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights.

Guests can also put a dollar in a jar to get a chance to claim the jackpot if they catch the albino catfish that lives in the lake.

Employee Derrick Grace says that plans are in the works to eventually open a campground and a picnic area.

There will also be an open talent contest following the Coca Cola preliminaries.

The Old Fashion Fair night, a fair favorite, will be Wednesday, July 4, at 7 p.m. Old Fashion Fair night includes a greased pig contest, watermelon eating contest and needle in a haystack contest.

The fair concludes Saturday night, July 7, with fireworks and a truck pull.

Hunt said the fair is the perfect place to find good, clean family fun.

The board works diligently to plan the fair year round and has even made huge strides to insure the best company comes to town to provide the rides and equipment.

Hunt said the Estill County Fair won the most progressive fair award twice in the last eight years. The Estill County Fair is one of only two fairs to have won the award twice and the only fair to have won it within eight years of the most previous award.

"All of our fair board members are dedicated volunteers," he said. "We know our fair will never get any bigger than it is now, but we want to make our fair the best little fair in the state."

Hunt said the fair would not be possible without great business sponsors and support from the community.

With all of this the fair now offers a variety of activities, rides and events.

"There is something for everybody in the community to enjoy," he said.

There is a small admission fee that differs throughout the week of the parade.

A complete list of events, including times, admission fees and registration fees can be found in the fair catalogue available at the Estill County Extension Office on Stacy Lane.

"They expect us to go along to college and do these great things," Taylor said. "What inspires me here tonight is you made a choice to come back. To me, that means more than mommy and daddy waking you up and making you get on a school bus."

Taylor said he believes the program is the prime example of having a second chance.

"If at first you don't succeed, brush yourself off and try again," Taylor said.

Skipper said she hopes the graduates do not misinterpret the value of their diplomas because it will open up many doors for them in the future.

"Your diploma means a future without boundaries," Skipper said. "Remember that you're second to no one. Pursue your goals but keep your loved ones close."

She also asked the graduates to remember their families and loved ones who helped them get to where they are now.

"Family support is very important," Skipper said. "We have so many people here and without your support a lot of them probably wouldn't be here right now."

Skipper congratulated the local community for their support of the GED program. Fifty-two different businesses and organizations in the area help to sponsor the program for the 2011-2012 year.

"We had great, tremendous help from the community here," Skipper said. "The community here is just wonderful."

She urges anyone interested in joining the GED program to do so before January 2014, which is when the test will become electronic and the price will go up to $120.

"Before the test changes in January 2014, we want everybody to take the GED while it's still paper and pencil because it's only $60," Skipper said.

Lastly, Skipper congratulated the class on a job well-done and emphasized the importance of a high school diploma, not only for the graduates but future generations.

"Not only have you done it for yourselves, but you've done it for your family and the generations that will come after you," said Skipper.

LUNCHES

However, the numbers can be reviewed each year and schools may choose to opt out at any time.

Lunch and breakfast rates for all other schools still stand, however.

In elementary schools breakfast is now $1.10 and lunch is now $1.65.

In the high school and middle school breakfast is now $1.10 and lunch is now $1.80.

During the June 21 meeting the board took several other actions.

The board approved a bid for $19,000 from the Ravenna Police Department for a School Resource Officer (SRO).

This bid is lower than the bid submitted from the Estill County Sheriff's Office.

Superintendent Bert Hensley said the school system gets approximately $16,000 from the safe schools program. This would require the school board to pay the SRO only $3,000 from its budget.

The Sheriff's Office had submitted a bid for $26,000.

Contracts awarded for improvements on 2 bridges

By WHITNEY LEGGETT
CV&T News Editor

Estill is part of four counties to be involved in highway projects.

The Kentucky Transportation Cabinet has awarded two contracts totaling nearly $267,000 for highway projects in Owsley, Estill, Breathitt and Magoffin Counties within the Department of Highways District 10.

According to a press release sent last week, "contracts awarded as part of the May 2012 letting are a $239,290 contract for repairs to expansion joints on bridges on KY 15 and KY 2472 in Breathitt County, KY 1571 in Estill County and KY 1081 in Magoffin County. The project is to be completed by Nov. 15. The Breathitt bridge projects will each take 10 days, and the Estill and Magoffin bridge projects will each take 15 days."

H.B. ELKINS
Department of Highways

In Estill County the project is being done on a bridge that stretches over Miller's Creek near the intersection of KY 1398 and Pryse Road.

H.B. Elkins, public information officer of Department of Highways District 10, said the concrete bridge was built in the 1980s and has had no major repairs since.

The bridge was initially built to replace a one-lane steel trust bridge with a wooden deck that flooded frequently.

As part of this project, the expansion joints of the new concrete bridge will be repaired.

There is also work being done on a second bridge on KY 1571. The contract for this bridge was awarded in January. This bridge is farther east on Ky 1571 and also crosses Miller's Creek.

The contract for the second bridge is for deck restoration at a cost of $177,846.60.

There is no estimated start date for the projects in Estill County.

Elkins said the contractors are allowed to decide when the project would begin. Once started, the project on the first bridge must be completed in 15 days the second must be completed in 30 days. All projects must also be completed before November 15.

While there may be some lane closures and delays during construction, there shouldn't be any complete closures at the bridge, Elkins said.

Lessons from reflecting on 'The Year of 21'

As I was driving to work the other day, it dawned on me that in just a few days, I will turn another year older.

This was strange for me because a few years ago I would have been running around yelling about it a month in advance so my mom and dad "wouldn't forget."

Growing up, my best friend and I would call each year by an age.

WHITNEY LEGGETT
CV&T News Editor

For example, when I turned 13, I was embarking on "The Year of 13."

It was a strange and pointless thing, but it made each year seem to have a little more significance, I suppose.

I guess this means that this weekend I will begin "The Year of 22."

As I do, though, it's hard not to reflect on "The Year of 21."

It was a huge year for me. When I look back I can think of incredibly important and life changing things that happened each month.

I found a job, I found love and I found my own place on top of graduating, losing people and gaining others.

I find that as I end one year and start another, it's important to recognize the things that took place that will shape and mold the way that I face the next 12 months.

I anxiously waited for the last day in June of 2011 because that meant I was finally 21. As with anyone, I knew that it would be an amazing year.

Not only could I legally drink but I thought that meant I had to answer less to mom and dad. That wasn't the case and I found that drinking at bars and clubs wasn't appealing. I think it did it a total of four times.

Apparently July 2011 wasn't a very exciting month for me. I had to actually look back on my Facebook timeline (I knew it would come in handy sometime) to even remember what I did.

What I found was a lot of trips to Sonic with my friends, a few days spent tanning, Joss Stone released an album that I was incredibly excited about and I, for some reason, started watching Unsolved Mysteries a lot.

In August I left the Citizen Voice & Times after covering for Rhonda Smyth while she was out for surgery. I thought I wouldn't ever work here again, that my time here was up. I was clearly wrong.

I also went to a party to send my closest cousin off to Kuwait. It was so hard to watch my aunt and uncle and to know he would he oversees in the scorching heat and a dangerous situation for a year.

It was most difficult to realize he wouldn't be celebrating Thanksgiving, Christmas or family reunions with us this year.

More sadness struck my life when in September I lost a good friend. I had lost family members in the past but never a friend. I learned it was a totally different kind of pain when someone so young with so much potential is taken.

It was more painful for me because, for a short time, he was more than a friend. And that became an even more shattering sort of grief. I came to terms with the fact that he wasn't suffering anymore and found comfort in God.

For the first time in awhile I ran straight into the arms of God for comfort and I found that He wouldn't allow me to grieve, because my friend wouldn't have wanted that.

I found the most comfort in his word. I clung to Ecclesiastes 3, "There is a time for everything and a season for every activity under the heavens: a time to be born and a time to die, a time to plant and a time to uproot, a time to kill and a time to heal, a time to tear down and a time to build, a time to weep and a time to laugh, a time to mourn and a time to dance..."

I found it wasn't a time to mourn any longer and decided to build in October.

I met a guy, went on a few dates and found myself totally encapsulated by the adventure that he presented.

He was different, and funny and exciting. Everything that I needed to lift my spirits... and that he did.

I also helped my mother celebrate her 50th birthday. I started to realize that before I ever took my first breath, God had created the perfect woman to be my mother.

He skillfully and thoughtfully placed me with her and she was celebrating making it 50 years. We threw her a surprise party and toasted with champagne and strawberries to many, many more years.

The next three months were a wintry blur.

I vaguely remember going to concerts, holding my sisters hand through her first surgery and that boy I told you about asking me to be his girlfriend (officially).

January meant a whole new year for everyone: a new start.

I spent the first day of 2012 in church with my boyfriend and made promises, goals and wishes for a new year of happiness, success and growth.

I firmly believe my prayers were answered.

The first half of 2012, the last half of "The Year of 21," has moved so quickly but huge things have happened.

In February and March I started applying for jobs. I interviewed for a couple and found there weren't any offers by the beginning of April.

A few weeks in though, after much prayer and planning, I was asked to take over the news editors job at the CV&T. I was so excited I called my boyfriend crying and couldn't even wait to get out of Irvine before calling just about every important person in my life.

That same month I said goodbye to The Eastern Progress and a staff I had grown to love.

In May I finally walked across the stage at the 2012 Eastern Kentucky University commencement ceremony.

With a sigh of relief and shaking knees I shook several hands leading up to the final one that handed me my degree.

I had done it and the train wasn't stopping there. Just weeks later I started my first job after college with huge aspirations and expectations.

Each of them has been met, so far.

I can now call myself an Estill Countian, as I have moved out on my own into an apartment in Irvine.

I am so proud of where I am working, the community I am joining and the year of my life that is coming to a close.

It's easy to start a new year and say, "Last year was the best, worst or most important of my life."

But it's more difficult to sit back and relive it for an hour.

A year ago I was a 20-year-old girl trying to figure out to be more of a woman. I thought that meant being able to drink legally and trying to exert my independence at home.

I found that being more of a woman and less of a girl required a year of substantial losses and even more substantial gains.

My prayer for "The Year of 22," is that I continue to find myself and make myself at home in my whole new world after college.

Student pushes against odds to achieve higher education

As a college student, you rely a lot on outside sources of money to pay for your higher education. Scholarships, grants and work study all provide students with the money they need to succeed and earn their degree. But what students such as myself will be stuck with after college is a lot more than a pretty plaque with my name on it.

If you come from a middle income family, you don't receive the fancy government grants that pay for everything and anything you need. And if your grade point average isn't sparkling without a hint of failure, you definitely don't get colleges welcoming you with full-ride scholarships. No, what people in my boat get are loans.

By KYLE WOOSLEY
KPA Summer Intern

It's no secret that loans are the absolute last ditch effort for a college student. I actually had a friend of mine break down into tears when he thought he may have to take out a single loan.

I, on the other hand, am attending college almost entirely on loan money. And the debt that will follow after school will be crippling, to say the least. Having to take out loans almost caused me to not attend college in the first place. And things don't appear to be looking up either.

At the end of this month, Congress will be attempting to pass a piece of legislation that would double the student loan interest rate. I know we are in a tough economy and our capitalist vampire (or the CV, as I like to call it) governmental machine is trying to get as much money as possible, but why take it out on people who are trying to actually make something of their lives?

In this economy, it's extremely difficult to even find a job with a college degree. How can people be expected to pay off their debt when they can't even find a job?

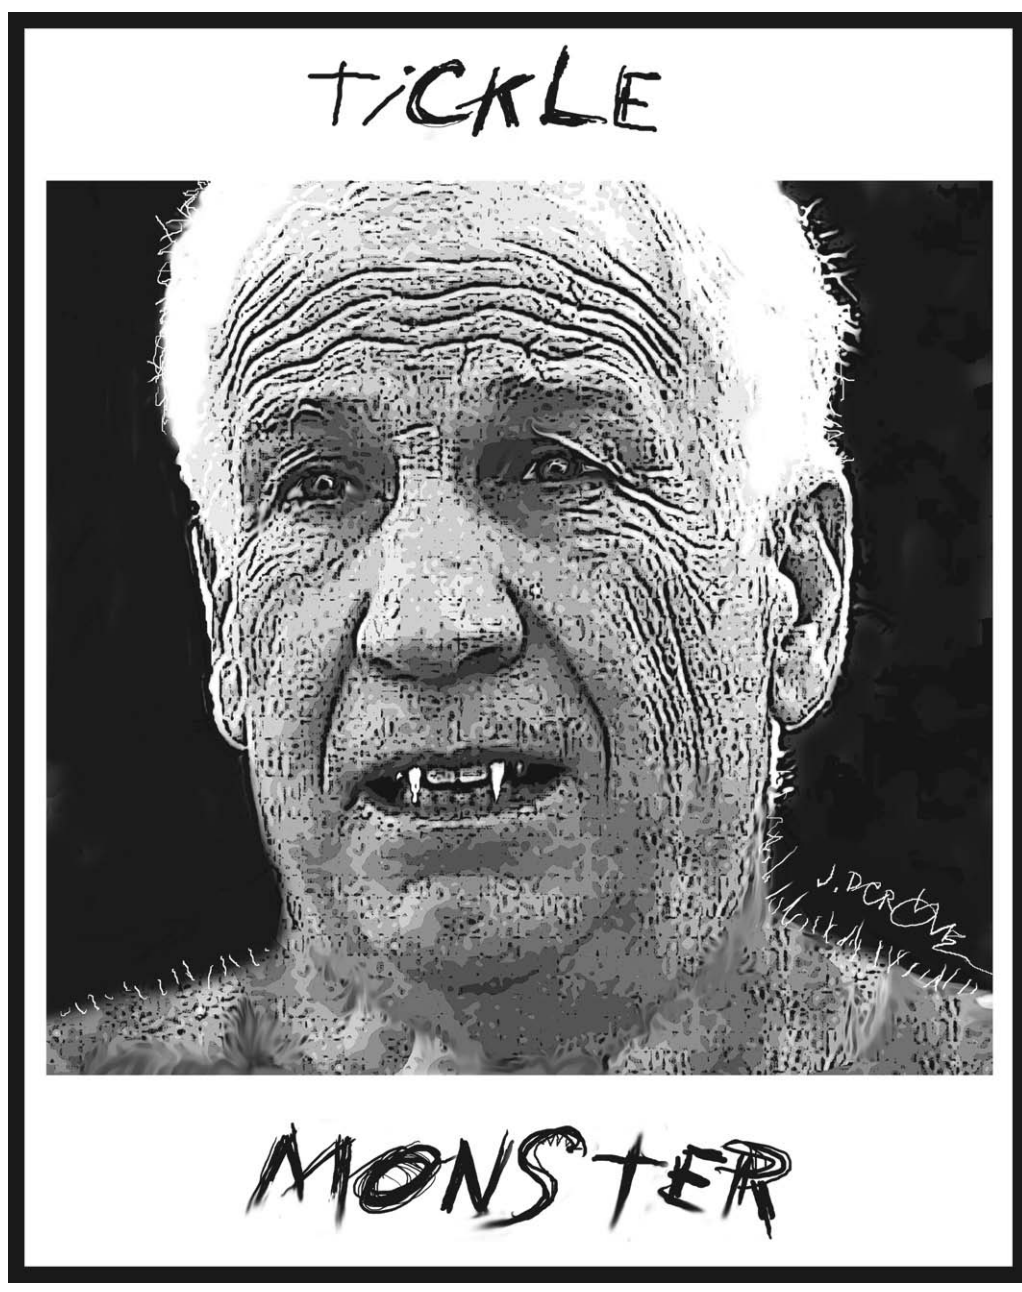

I'm about to start my senior year of college, which means, I'm preparing to step out of the comfort zone and move into the real world. I don't want to be forced to live with my parents for the rest of my life because the government refuses to let me get an education without handing over my life savings.

You go to college to begin making a life for yourself. You go to expand your horizons, challenge your knowledge and move forward with your education. One does not go to college so they can hand the CV everything you've worked to earn in college.

From my personal experience, I've worked my entire college career. But I pretty much only make enough money for gas and food. And to know that any excess money I have is going to disappear is not exactly positive reinforcement. In fact, it almost caused me to drop out of college.

I can't imagine what some people, who are in a more difficult place than I am, must be going through. One of the most frightening things in the world is to think you have put yourself through the mental torture of college to only receive nothing but a bill at the end.

Despite the overwhelming odds against the CV, I keep pushing through. Because I know the value of my education shouldn't be measured by how many zeros I get on that first loan repayment bill. In the end, my education will be worth much more than a piece of paper; it will become just one more thing that defines who I am.

Richardson to study abroad

A local student will spend part of her summer in England as part of a study abroad program.

Natascha Richardson, 17, of Ravenna, will be taking a five-week online English course while studying at Harlaxton College in Lincolnshire.

Richardson is a senior at Estill County High School and a student at The Gatton Academy of Mathematics and Science in Kentucky at Western Kentucky University.

The Gatton Academy is a "residential high school for Kentucky juniors and seniors interested in advanced careers in science, technology, engineering and mathematics."

She leaves for her study abroad July 17 and while in England, Richardson will have the opportunity to tour a number of literary sites as part of the program.

Richardson said she was able to simply sign up for the program, offered by The Gatton Academy, and state why she interested in order to be selected.

She said she is excited about the opportunity.

"I have always wanted to go to England and see all the sites," she said.

Richardson is the daughter of Ray and Antje Richardson.

Estill student graduates from The Center for Rural Development's 2012 youth leadership program

Estill County High School student Jay Winkler learned what it takes to start his own business this summer at The Center for Rural Development's 2012 Entrepreneurial Leadership Institute (ELI) youth leadership program.

Winkler graduated from the program on June 15 after attending a week-long session on the grounds of The Center in Somerset.

The Center selected 34 high school students from across Southern and Eastern Kentucky to grow their business and entrepreneurial skills at this year's session of ELI.

During the week, TOUR Southern and Eastern Kentucky (TOUR SEKY) president and CEO Jeff Crowe and chief financial officer Michelle King worked with seven ELI teams to develop a business plan for a tourism-related business.

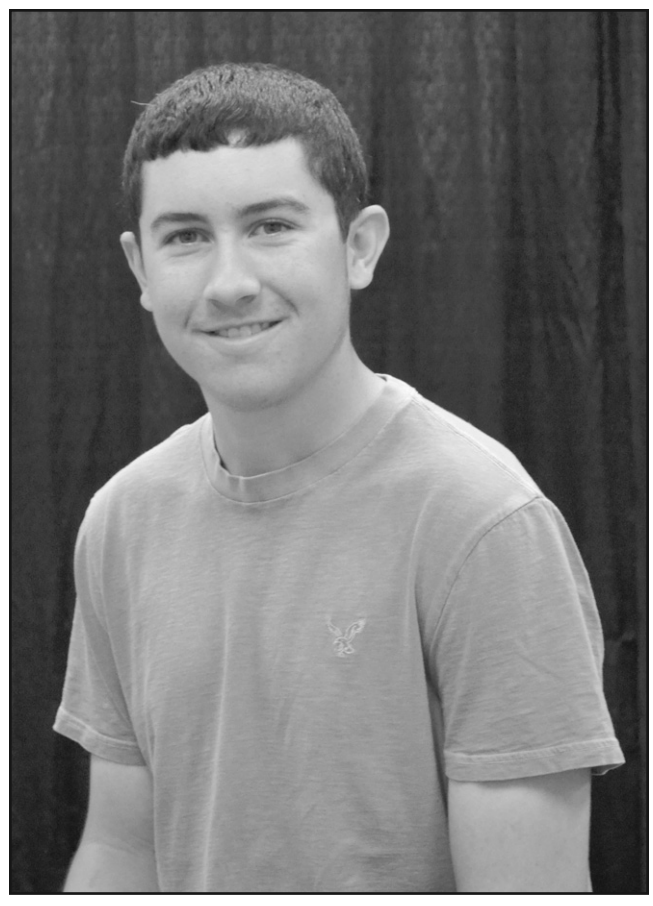

Winkler's team crafted a business concept for a restaurant on Lake Cumberland, "The Big 'En,' specializing in a unique blend of American fare and classic seafood.

"I learned all about what it takes to start my own business," said Winkler. "I now have the skills and passion to open a business."

Each ELI team drew a business idea at random and put together a business and marketing plan, including financial planning and customer service, to get that business up and running.

"This is a great opportunity to showcase our youth the important economic impact tourism dollars play in our economy," Crowe said. "TOUR SEKY was able to work closely with these students to assist in their business ventures and encourage them to remain in our region to start new businesses."

The week culminated with the program's Business Concept Competition in which each of the ELI teams presented their business concepts to a panel of regional business leaders acting as financial lenders.

For more information about ELI or other youth leadership programs, call 606-677-6000 or email youth@centertech.com.

ETS Scholars had the opportunity to experience college residence hall living, while being housed in McGregor Hall at EKU. Other campus activities included an EKU campus tour and orientation, student Individual Learning Plan review by Kim Baldwin, (representative from Kentucky Higher Education Assistance Authority, KHEAA), and review of Explore, PLAN and ACT test scores. One of the highlights of the camp was the opportunity for scholars to learn about careers in aviation and receive a "Young Eagles Flight" Certificate by going up in an airplane. The activity was made possible courtesy of the Young Eagles Flight Program at the Madison County Airport.

First night evening events included team building activities, a cultural diversity experience and an ice cream social with the EKU Migrant Program camp participants.

Day two of Camp Chameleon started early, as the group headed out for a day in Louisville. The Muhammad Ali Center was the first stop. After lunch, camp moved on for a campus tour at the University of Louisville. An early dinner at the Spaghetti Factory allowed the group to attend the theatrical musical production of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat"

On the last morning of camp, ETS Scholars focused on writing about their camp experience. The compilation of their writings became the 7th edition of "The Chameleon" publication. The afternoon sessions focused on Career Selection, Financial Literacy, Financial Aid and Getting the Green auction simulation.

ETS Scholars recruitment is underway for students going into 6th grade through 12th grade. Individuals wishing to become an ETS scholar should print an ETS Application from the ETS website at: www.ets.eku.edu, or request an application be mailed to you by calling the ETS Office at (859) 622-5425 or email a request to the ETS Director, Lisa Sons: lisa.sons@eku.edu.

Hometown gals experience 'time of their life' as they audition for 'American Idol'

By LISA BICKNELL
CV&T Staff Writer

With "The next American Idol is in this car" scrawled on their windows, Brooklyn Estes Conrad, 24, and Whitney Williams, 18, drove out of town, announcing to the world their intentions to conquer some fears and follow their dreams.

On Saturday, June 16, they checked into a hotel in Charlotte, NC. The next morning they were up bright and early to register for "American Idol" tryouts.

Conrad described the next few days as "surreal," and Williams said "I never saw so many cameras in my life."

Adding to the dream-like quality of their experience was the opportunity to meet Scotty McCreery, winner of "American Idol" in 2011, and Ryan Seacrest, the show's host.

"I had heard on the news that they were going to be in the same arena," Williams said, "I didn't know they would be standing a few feet away."

When she yelled, "I love you, Scotty!" she didn't expect him to yell back, "Well, I love you too." Despite his body guards trying to push him on through the crowd, he pulled her aside for a quick photo.

"He's even cuter in person," Williams smiles.

Ryan Seacrest was also smiling and cooperative when they requested a picture with him. Conrad says that she was surprised he took the time to stop for them.

Scoring pictures with two of the big names of "American Idol" and living the tryout experience was pretty much worth the trip for the hometown girls.

While they hoped to make it through the first round, they didn't really expect to, knowing that the competition would be stiff.

"We'll cry if we make it through—not if we don't make it," Williams said was their attitude going into the competition.

After months of deliberating whether or not to go, the cousins-by-marriage decided to put their fears behind them and make the trip.

Conrad says she had thought about it for a long time, but "anxiety issues" held her back.

In January, her husband started telling people that she was going to try out.

"He wasn't going to let me back out," she laughs.

Still, she had second thoughts as she battled laryngitis the past three weeks.

When Williams learned that her cousin's wife was going, she saw an opportunity to catch a ride to Charlotte.

"Ever since I was a little girl," she said, "I wanted to be on that show."

After registration early on Monday morning, the pair and Conrad's husband spent the day exploring the city.

Wearing orange bracelets that identified them as contestants, the ladies were asked several times to "sing for random people on the street," Conrad said.

Nearly everyone was friendly and encouraging when they obliged, she said.

Sometimes they "jammed" with other contestants. They met "a guy with a guitar" and sang a little with him.

He was one of the relative few to get one of the coveted golden tickets.

Williams and Conrad say they'll definitely be looking for familiar faces when the show airs next January.

Conrad estimates that between 3,000 and 4,000 people auditioned on Tuesday, and between 500 and 600 of them before Conrad and Williams.

As their turn neared, contestants were separated into groups of four in front of a dozen small black cubicles that were open on one side.

After hours of standing in line, the girls finally got their 15-20 second shot at fame. Williams sang "American Honey" by Lady Antebellum, and Conrad sang "Only One" by Melissa Etheridge.

Both admitted that they changed their minds at the last minute about which songs they would be performing.

Part of the challenge, they agreed, was staying focused while contestants in booths on either side of them were performing at the same time.

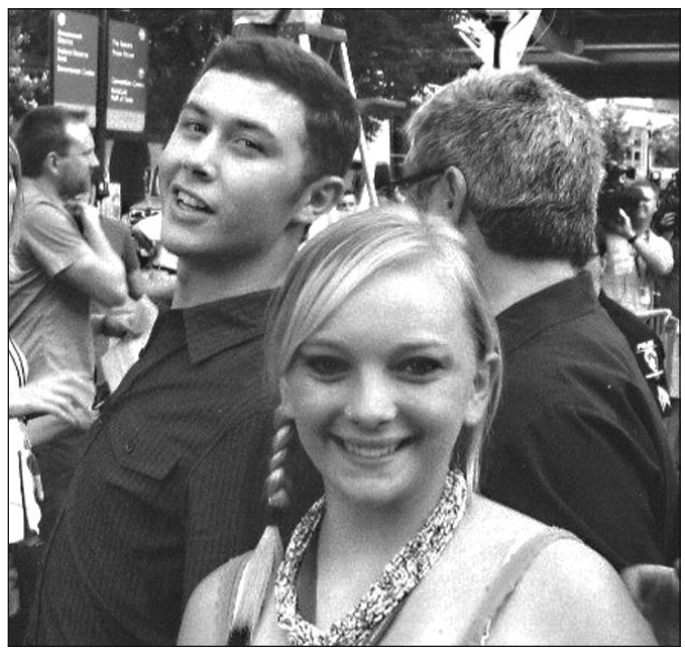

Although neither of the girls made it through to the next round, they were encouraged to try another year.

They say they have no regrets about trying out for American Idol.

"Once we got there," Conrad says, "it was like, 'Who cares about the audition?' "We had a lot of fun!"

What you need to know about a common health problem

According to the Society of Interventional Radiology, 20 to 40 percent of women, age 35 and older, have uterine fibroids of a significant size. Learning more about these common, benign growths-and how they affect women's health can be a smart idea.

Q: What are uterine fibroids?

A: Uterine fibroids develop in the muscular wall of the uterus, ranging in size from a quarter of an inch to larger than a cantaloupe. Occasionally, they can cause the uterus to grow to the size of a five-month pregnancy. Uterine fibroids are the most frequent indication for hysterectomy in premenopausal women.

Q: What are the typical symptoms?

A: Most fibroids don't cause symptoms. Only 10-20 percent of women who have fibroids require treatment. Depending on size, location and number of fibroids, they may cause:

•Heavy, prolonged menstrual periods and unusual monthly bleeding, sometimes with clots (This can lead to anemia.)

•Pelvic pain and pressure

•Pain in the back and legs

•Pain during sexual intercourse

•Bladder pressure leading to a frequent urge to urinate

•Pressure on the bowel, leading to constipation and bloating

•Abnormally enlarged abdomen.

Q: How are fibroids treated.

A: Uterine fibroid embolization (UFE), also known as uterine artery embolization, is performed by an interventional radiologist, a physician who is trained to perform this and other types of embolization and minimally invasive procedures. The procedure is performed while the patient is conscious-but sedated and feeling no pain. It does not require general anesthesia and usually only a hospital stay of one night. Painkilling medications and drugs that control swelling are prescribed following the procedure.

According to the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, UFE is "safe and effective." Women can and should be confident about their decision to consider UFE as a treatment option. An ultrasound or MRI diagnostic test will help an interventional radiologist to determine if a woman is a candidate.

Interventional radiology is a recognized medical specialty by the American Board of Medical Specialties. Interventional radiologists complete preliminary training in diagnostic radiology and advanced training in vascular and interventional radiology.

Q: Where can I learn more?

A: For information on UFE or interventional radiology, visit the SIR website at www.SIRweb.org.

Women seeking treatment for fibroids should learn all their treatment options. To determine if UFE is an option, many consult an interventional radiologist.

Nutrition: A key to health for seniors

Many believe that the idea "you are what you eat" has particular significance for seniors.

That's because following a healthy diet can often lead directly to a better quality of life, including being more alert, having a stronger immune system, more energy, faster recuperation times and the ability to do a better job managing chronic health problems.

It's also said that eating well can lead to a more positive outlook and better emotional balance. Plus, it can also help to keep muscles, bones, organs and other body parts stronger over time.

Stay Hydrated

Part of a proper diet is making sure you drink enough water. Seniors can be prone to dehydration because their bodies may lose some of their ability to regulate fluid levels and their sense of thirst on a regular basis. Drinking water with meals can help them avoid urinary tract infections, constipation and possibly confusion.

Take Your Vitamins

Even those who pay attention to nutrition can sometimes benefit from taking a vitamin supplement, particularly when it comes to getting enough vitamin B and vitamin D.

•After age 50, a person's stomach produces less gastric acid, which can make it difficult to absorb vitamin B12, a vitamin needed to help keep blood and nerves vital. In order to get the recommended daily intake (2.4 mcg) of B12, it may be necessary for some to take a supplement.

•As people get older, their skin is less efficient when it comes to synthesizing vitamin D, which, together with calcium, can help to protect older adults from osteoporosis, so taking a supplement may be to your benefit.

In both cases, as with any vitamin or nutritional supplement, it's best to consult your doctor before beginning a supplement program.

Get an Assessment

Since poor eating habits are a primary concern among the senior population, home health care aides are playing an increasingly important role in providing support for those who might be at risk. In light of this and other issues, Interim HealthCare-one of the leaders in the home care industry, providing services to over 50,000 individuals nationwide-offers a free independent living assessment for seniors.

To learn more or to take the free assessment, you can visit independentlivingassessment.com.

The benefits of healthy eating can often lead directly to a better quality of life for seniors-particularly, increased alertness and a stronger immune system.

Helpful Hints in memory of Lucy Hatfield

1. Let doughnuts stand 15 minutes before frying.
2. Use potato water when making rolls. Keeps bread fresh longer.
3. If brown sugar hardens, place an apple in container, seal and let set 1 day. Remove apple and pull apart with fork.
4. When using confectioner's, use 1 teaspoon liquid at a time.
5. Cheese is more flavorful when served at room temperature. Remove 1 hour before serving.
6. For flaky pie crust, measure flour and fat into the bowl and chill at least an hour before mixing.

George Washington was the only president to receive all electoral college votes twice, in the 1788 and 1792 elections.

The smallest bone in the human body is the stapes or stirrup bone located in the middle ear. It is approximately 1⁄10 inch long. Shaped like a stirrup on a sadle, it transmits sound vibrations through the hearing system.

ENCOURAGING WORD: HOPE DOES NOT DISAPPOINT

Howard Coop
Guest Columnist

It was an interesting event that, somewhat by accident, I partially witnessed. A group of men, apparently discussing a difficult situation that had been experienced by one, or all, of them, were grim-faced and, apparently, a bit disappointed. After a bit, one of the men, with a hint of a smile on his face, walked away from the group. As he did so, he turned toward them and said, "Well, at least, I can hope, can't I?"

That, to me, was a powerful statement about real life, and it was, indeed, uplifting. As that man indicated, one can, if there is the will to do so, hope in any, and every, situation, and the results are always pleasantly and surprisingly amazing. In those situations, there can be, and often is, a profound discovery that is most helpful: Hope, desire accompanied by anticipation, is a tremendously powerful force in human life. It can be transforming, and it can lift one out of an extremely difficult situation. Robert G. Ingersoll, a man known as "the great agnostic" of the nineteenth century, has been quoted as saying that, even in the darkest of human situations, "Hope sees a star." Too, another individual, writing anonymously, penned these poignant words: "When hope is alive, the night is less dark; the solitude less deep, fear less acute."

In the seemingly impossible situations one often faces in the unpleasant struggles with the enormous problems of everyday life, transforming hope enables one to look through the gloom and see realistic possibilities and, in spite of seemingly insurmountable obstacles, move toward the realization of those possibilities.

In everyday life, there is an observable fact that can be seen: There are frequent disappointments that come at unexpected times and all too often. Many things do not work out to our satisfaction. But for centuries, there has been a guiding principle tested in the crucible of life by which we can live:

"Hope does not disappoint us."

Ensure water supply for the garden

ERIC BAKER
Agriculture Agent

With much of Kentucky now considered in a moderate drought, gardeners should ensure their plants receive the right amount of water. Recent high temperatures are good for some vegetables, such as tomatoes, but the heat may wilt other vegetables if they do not receive sufficient water, either from rainfall or irrigation.

To ensure healthy plants and good harvests, gardeners should make sure to irrigate plants when rainfall (roughly 1-inch per week) is insufficient. A water gauge, available at home supply stores, is an easy and inexpensive way to track rainfall totals. This simple tool can help you conserve water, since you'll know when to turn on the hose and when to leave it off. If you don't have a rain gage, you can place an open-faced can, such as a coffee can, near the garden and check to see how much rain it collects. Be sure to empty the can periodically so that mosquitoes do not breed. You can also stick your finger into the soil to feel how moist or dry it is—water when the soil is dry to the first knuckle. And later in the summer, watch for a reversal of weather conditions, as periods of limited rainfall are a common occurrence in August into September.

Here are some tips for a bountiful garden:

•Use newspapers (a few layers) and grass clippings (from lawn that has not been treated with herbicides), not landscape mulch.

•To reduce competition, reduce weeds with compost, black plastic or hoeing. Work compost into the ground so that it doesn't form a hard crust, which can cause rain to run off rather than soak into plants.

•Gather produce early in the day, after the early morning dew has dried. Choose ripe fruits and vegetables that your family will be able to consume in a timely manner.

•Consider freezing any extra fruits and vegetables. Many, such as peas, peppers, beans and corn, freeze well. Just rinse, cut into appropriate pieces and place in a freezer-safe container or bag. (If you want individual pieces of the vegetables, place on a sheet tray lined with parchment to freeze and then transfer to the freezer-safe container or bag when frozen.) You can use extra basil to make into pesto and freeze as well. You can also freeze fresh herbs with water in ice cube trays, a handy way to have "fresh" flavors.

•Remove and discard any vegetables that are damaged, blemished or showing signs of disease or pests. (It's best to remove these from the garden area. Composting and feeding them to chickens are great ways to get rid of excess vegetables.)

•Harvest often to ensure a steady supply of tender and sweet vegetables and to prevent bolting. Allowing vegetables such as broccoli and cabbage to sit on the stem for too long, especially in warm temperatures, results in an unpalatable bitterness. It also gives wildlife and pests too many opportunities to ruin your hard work.

For more information, contact the Estill County Cooperative Extension Service at 723-4557. If you have some quality produce to show off, consider entering them in the upcoming County Fair exhibit hall on July 3. Educational programs of the Cooperative Extension Service serve all people regardless of race, color, sex, religion, disability or national origin.
